Stroke in children?

YES

Strokes happen in infants, toddlers, school-aged children and teens—about 5,000 US children every year—and cause lifelong disability. As common as childhood brain cancer.

Strokes in babies get labeled as “cerebral palsy.” Millions of children around the globe are living with stroke disabilities.

They can occur in healthy children, and in children with predisposing conditions like congenital heart disease or sickle cell disease.

They happen more in children of color, and economically-disadvantaged children.

The causes of childhood stroke are different from those in adults, but children also need the devices and drugs developed for adults.

We have learned a lot about cerebrovascular disease in children in the past 2 decades...but still have more questions than answers.

What is IPSO?

Global

Multidisciplinary

Thought leaders

Knowledge seekers

Advocates

Educators

Founded in February 2019, we are a global organization of health professionals and scientists who care about stroke and cerebrovascular disease in childhood. We developed out of our original collaborative network, the International Pediatric Stroke Study (IPSS), and now aim to broaden the scope of our mission beyond research.

Experts across related fields collaborate to advance knowledge on mechanisms of childhood stroke and stroke recovery with an eye towards preventing stroke and improving outcomes. IPSO will disseminate knowledge and best practices to first-line medical providers for the wider benefit of children with stroke worldwide. Throughout, IPSO will engage affected families to set priorities and advocate for children with cerebrovascular disease.
